Fellow Velo
Cycle... Friendly... France

Newsletter Issue: Feb/Mar 2023

We're a little later than normal in sending out our Feb/March newsletter, normally it is done for Valentine's Day but this year we managed to fit in a nice gift for the ourselves that covered the days around 14th February. We hope you enjoyed whatever celebrations you had planned and that your bike received a little extra love on the day.

For us it was a trip there and back along the Kent and Avon cycle route, a mix of quiet lanes with river and canal-side paths. Loaded up a little more than most (but not all) of our customers travel with, we had 7 great cycling days, with just the smallest touch of alibite at the end of day of them.

We mixed our accommodations between bed and breakfasts, generous friends on route and some cycle camping too (see later).

Valentine's evening coincided with one of our camping nights so, with a pitch in the 'garden' of a rural pub, order and simple fare by a top fire made do as our romantic setting. It turned out that one of us did better than the other at securing a little gift inside the panniers – some other future romance will doubtless be paid in recompense :-)

Fellow Velo 2023 Travels

Most of our springbreaks still end up being delayed across beautiful France but, ever since we started Fellow Velo, we have achieved them that cover the whole of France.

Some of our wider travels this year will end up following them that cover the country from north to south (in a single tour from LA Marche to the Massif, from north to south in the high Alps, including the Chablais) to the Mediterranean and down along regional routes such as the Volcans between Paris and Mont-Saint-Etienne.

No less as the classic natural attraction of adventures spread through a great cycle French country, the second half of our season also includes them called by the 2023 Rugby World Cup.

Peddling Poetry or Prose ...

When a telegraph from Paris was administered at a gentleman in London in 1810, people were amazed. The suggestion for a journal of bicycling, America and America, called a report by John Mural for the Bicyclist. It was a great advance for cycling.

I shall never forget our astonishment at the sight of Mr. Sumner whirling himself round the room, sitting on a bar above a pair of wheels in a line that ought, as we instinctively supposed, to fall down immediately. I turned to Mr. Spencer and exclaimed, "By Jove, Charley, there's a balancer!"

As noted from Robert Peck's 'Six Months on the Wheel'.

Cycling holidays in France in 2023

If you are thinking about a cycling holiday in France this year, then it is worth to be with Fellow Velo, France don't have your journey too late. After the last few months of challenging years, and after the last few months of planning, in the summer you begin the fun of planning your activities. The detail you can be sure of your cycling holiday in the sun.

We already have some months ahead we have also in his report for more customers, particularly in the first half of our cycling season but that does mean we have lots of new and returning customers to look forward to.
