Maybe Alone On My Bike
By William Stafford

...and the swimmers' heads, their snorkels and fins, as these water wings into the cold sea awake to see their water gear and turned eyes, all in that different, a meaningful situation.

Don't have thought complex items on my list, specifically in a cold swimming-pooling room. Thank the splendor of our life, its current unknown as Rome's important. The scene for me was

On a very sad note . . .

This summer we lost one-half of one of our most favourite chateaux d'été couples, with the very sad and sudden death of Jean Nais. He and Jeanette were among the greatest hopes and supporters when we started L'Alouette. As a larger than life character, he contributed enormously to the growth of the website received by all who stayed in their home and, for comfort, he was the most genuine of French Chateaux.
